Moon Photos Cover-up?

Dear Duncan: It was interesting reading the article (NEXUS 2#28) on possible artifacts on the Moon. I was enthralled by the prospects of the remains of an ancient Earth civilization maybe millions of years old, but I admit I was skeptical due to the very tenuous evidence supporting the theory.

However, the article wet my appetite for similar information, and I obtained a copy of the Hoagland's Mars Vol. III video which supports similar theories. In his videotaped lectures Hoagland presents evidence from greatly enlarged images taken from early Moon probes that were sent to take surveillance photos before crashing on the Moon, in preparation for the Apollo program. These images seemed to show the remains of a super structure that once may have supported vast glass domes miles wide covering entire lunar craters.

My thirst for more information grew as did my level of skepticism. Then I heard about the Clementine Moon probe, a military probe sent a few of years ago to provide more detailed images of the Moon.

We all know about spy satellites that from Earth orbit can resolve objects as small as 5 inches through the Earth's atmosphere. Therefore it seems reasonable the Clementine would beam back images with a resolution perhaps of 2 inches due to the vacuum of space. I eagerly awaited the Clementine images. But alas, when the images were published (Internet users see <http://clementine.cnes.fr/index.en.html>), only images with a resolution of hundreds of meters were presented. Now I am not so skeptical.

Do they honestly believe that we would believe that with all the modern satellite imaging technology they would only equip Clementine with 1960s technology? What's going on? I want to see the real images.

All this makes you wonder why apparently the space shuttle can't leave Earth orbit to explore the Moon—strange. Are they worried that new/ancient technology perhaps found underground on the Moon will weaken our dependence on fossil fuel? Are they worried that if the world was united and made a good and happy place it would weaken our 'dependence' on arms technology? All this is of course conjecture, but the Clementine affair only makes me wonder.

Do-it-Yourself Urine Cures

No. 1—Dear Duncan: When you used the valuable pages of NEXUS to expound on the "Hollow Earth Theory", I really thought you guys were losing it. Then, when you printed all that stuff on "Urine Therapy", I nearly cancelled my subscription. I mean, come on, I thought, you'd have to be utterly desperate even to try it.

Well, after thirty years of suffering virtually every gastro-related illness there is, I was! I did! And swat me with a stained glass window, it works! My haemorrhoids were the first positive sign: they went in the first week!

Now, three months later, I am the healthiest man that I can remember being, so allow me to sincerely thank all of you at NEXUS for the ultimate gift, my health (though I still don't buy all this Hollow Earth nonsense!).

Regards, Robert J. H., North Arm, Queensland, Australia.

No. 2—Duncan: Your information on urine therapy (NEXUS 3#02) inspired a little experiment this summer.

I've had a large, 15-mm diameter, dark, irregularly shaped and chunky mole in the middle of my chest for 20 years. Doctors checked it a few years ago and gave it a clean bill of health. This year it became scratchy. After reading in NEXUS how skin cancer can melt away through prolonged exposure to the patient's own urine, I wondered how my 20-year-old mole would react. After 10 days it deflated and virtually disappeared.

The fun part was devising a system that prevented any contact, smell or discomfort to myself or friends throughout the course, while keeping the test area saturated 24 hours a day. Here's how.

Cut a square patch of body tape, large enough to cover the mole (or cancer). (Lay it on a table, sticky side up.) Before applying it, place a thick ball of cotton wool central on the sticky side of the tape. Press your cotton wool-filled plaster onto the mole but press only three sides of the plaster onto your skin. (left, bottom, right) Leave the top open. (But first, shave if you have a hairy chest, for reasons that will become apparent later.)

In the morning, pee into a specimen jar. With practice you should aim to capture only a small amount of your midstream urine. Cap it. (Wash if you missed.) Use a hospital syringe, without the needle, to extract an amount that the cotton wool can comfortably hold. In my case, 10 ml worked fine. (Too much will drip, too little is too dry.) Slowly inject this specimen into the cotton wool through the top of your plaster which you left open. Done!

You'll be surprised at the lack of smell but, if you feel self-conscious, a small spray of cologne will do the trick.

Wash the syringe. Reapply from the original specimen as needed to keep the cotton moist. Only twice a day worked fine for me. After three days it began melting away. Just goes to show, if you piss on anything long enough it'll go away, unless it's genetically supposed to be there.

Mike S., Flux Research, NSW, Australia.

(Dear Robert & Mike: The feedback from readers who've tried urine therapy has been absolutely amazing! All sorts of problems have been cleared up—skin cancer being the most commonly reported. Yes, urine applied externally to skin cancers knocks 'em dead, according to about two dozen individual reports to our office alone! Go for it, readers! Ed.)

Not Content with Cover-ups!

I consider NEXUS to be the best of all the lunatic fringe mags I've encountered. This includes quality of writing and editing, which is not to say that it's perfect, but in a dismal field you're better than most. Probably because you weren't 'educated' in the US.

My main request is that you keep publishing stuff that is in totally new fields. You say you have a huge backlog of stuff that you don't have room for. Of course, some perennial favorites like crop circles and ETs are always going to get their due, but a lot of the same old stuff does not need to be represented every issue.

I'm particularly bored with more and more details about how the CIA, the DEA, the NSA and all the other assholes are importing drugs, killing people, subverting governments and doing all the shit that we know they always do.

I'm much more interested in stuff that I can do in my life to help generate the new frequency of reality that we all think is in the process of emerging.

Of course, it's good to warn people about the latest scams that are supposed to suck us into becoming more compliant robo-slaves, but interminable lists of evil deeds and conspiracy genealogies serve basically no purpose, in my opinion. What the hell am I going to do with this information?

Same goes for UFO sighting cover-up 'scandals'. This shit is no longer news! Let's hear more from people who have talked with these beings, who have interesting speculations about who and what they might actually be and what the hell they're up to. Obviously, they don't all have the same agenda—so let's hear about that.

I would also love to see one new science article about a free-energy device that actually works! Every article is the same: grandiose proclamations about unlocking the secrets of the Universe; horrifically explained technical details; account of building, or trying to build, the holy object; conclusion paragraph admitting that the thing generated about a tenth of a picowatt of a milli-ampere of a microwatt of 'free energy'; or that they didn't have enough money to get it together; or t hat no one's ever been able to duplicate Tesla's shit anyway...

Overall, though, I give you an A minus. Excellent diversity, pretty good editorial quality, fascinating advertising and, most important, heart's in the right place. Bravo!

Ethan C., Berkeley, CA, USA.

(Dear Ethan: I agree with most of your points, except those about free-energy research. I don't feel we hype it up as much as you suggest, and I do believe that one day such cross-pollination of research will help make the 'big one' available. Ed.)

Making the Right Choices

Dear Duncan: I would take this opportunity to comment on the Editorial which appeared in February/March 1997 issue of NEXUS (4#02).

I was pleased to read what may be considered NEXUS policy, and

... more Letters to the Editor

NB: Please keep letters to approx. 100-150 words in length. Ed.

one which does not pander to the needs of sales, but expresses a powerful message to the readers as to how an individual must take responsibility on all levels of living, beginning with the here and now.

Yes, everyone does have a choice and should use it wisely, for that is the only way that we will see predictable Earth Changes.

In the book, One Light, the Transmissions of Zadore consistently exposed the illusion in which we live, and which is propped up by those Entities outlined in your Editorial.

All we need to do is to want to do something, something in a positive manner to assert our freedom, and what better way than to make the right choices, those being the right choices for our Earth.

It is the beginning of true self-empowerment.

Mother Shipton Prediction

Dear NEXUS: Congratulations on what I believe to be the best magazine in your field! I have collected every copy for the last five years, and am happy to enclose a subscription renewal.

I would also like to bring to your attention something I have discovered, and wonder if you or your readers are aware of the connection between one of the predictions of Mother Shipton and recent events unfolding in and around Mexico City.

NEXUS vol. 2, no. 24 has some very interesting predictions from Mother Shipton which, I believe, could be referring to the present times. In particular, I quote the lines:

*Three sleeping mountains
gather breath;
And spew out mud, and ice and death.*

There is only one place in the world I know of that could fit this prophecy, and it lies in Mexico—the scene of the largest ongoing UFO flap ever. The key was "sleeping mountains".

If we assume that a sleeping mountain is a volcano, we have, between Mexico City and Pueblo, Mt Popocatepetl, Mt Ixtacihuatl and, east of Pueblo, Mt Citlaltépetl. Translated into English we have: Popocatepetl, "Sleeping Warrior"; Ixtacihuatl, "Sleeping Woman"; Citlaltépetl, "Sleeping Sentinel".

Today they are no longer sleeping. Popocatepetl has been venting for around four years now, after being dormant for hundreds of years.

Mother Shipton also mentions other signs to watch out for "as man nears latter century". She mentions the coming of a "fiery Dragon", interpreted by most to be a comet.

We live in interesting times and I believe we are about to witness things beyond our imagination. I look forward to reading about them in future issues of NEXUS.

Yours truly, N.J.M., Traralgon, Victoria, Australia.

Acclaim for Colloidal Silver

Dear Editor: In a previous issue regarding an article on Colloidal Silver, you asked for feedback.

Well, I contacted Mr Courtenay of Montville (whose name may well be Courtly, as he was so kindly spoken) on Dec. 13, and he despatched a 300ml bottle immediately (without waiting for payment or anything). I received the package on Dec. 16 and began application immediately on a most horrible gum infection (which I did not have until some very inept dental work) and also ingested the recommended amount.

The results were marvellous. An abscess which had formed, subsided and healed perfectly. I intend to stay with colloidal silver as an immune booster, etc...

Believe me, I would now be toothless in Currumbin if it weren't for colloidal silver...

Lilian T., Currumbin, Qld, Australia.

Alien Communication

Dear NEXUS: The incident of unexplained radio signals from outer space in 1928 was not 'kept secret', as written in NEXUS Feb/Mar '97, but reported in a letter to the scientific journal Nature (no. 3079, issue 122/681) in the same year, bearing the title, "Shortwave Echoes and the Aurora Borealis" by Carl Stoermer.

I first read about this astonishing example of communication with an alien technology in Paul Watzlawick's classic How Real Is Real?, which I recommend to all people embarked on the search for truth.

An interesting detail that was left out in your article, is that in the star constellation map obtained by Duncan Lunan, by applying simple geometry, the central star of Bootes, Epsilon Bootis, is grossly displaced. Not in a random way, though, but mirrored precisely along a vertical axis that is an integral part of the message!

Now it has been suggested that to resume the dialogue, we should send out the original message (dating back to 1928), but with Epsilon Bootes in its correct position... This seems like an easy thing to do, yet I have never heard of any progress in this matter. Do any NEXUS readers know more about this?

Yours sincerely, Philip S., London, UK.

In Praise of Sound Therapy

Dear Duncan: My main reason for writing is because when I read the article on Sound and Health in NEXUS 4#01, I knew that I had to make sure you were aware of Sharry Edwards and her 'magical' work with sound!

I studied operatic singing in the late '60s/early '70s, and having always been active in alternative health and libertarian movements I studied all the info I could find on sound and healing. I read the books, took the classes (many of them too 'cutesy' to go into) and even studied Overtone Chanting with Jill Purce on one of her trips to the States.

My hubris was disgusting: I thought I knew it all, and when I came across Sharry Edwards at a Whole Life Conference in New York I didn't bother attending her lecture, assuming that she was going 'to teach me how to hum'. Then, a few months later I attended a Global Sciences Congress in Virginia and, having an hour to kill between lecturers I wanted to hear, I decided to ("What the heck!") listen to the Sound Lady. Five minutes into her lecture I was physically kicking myself and 'mea culpa-ing' my pride. This woman was light years ahead of me and everyone else. One month later, I flew out to Ohio to learn more.

Sharry took Einstein's "mass is energy, energy is mass" to heart and studied the energies—the frequencies—of which we consist.

Over the past several decades, she has been able to determine how to feed different people the different frequencies that they need to reharmonize, or heal, their bodies. I have watched as a paralysed man opened a twisted hand after only twenty minutes of a very specific frequency. I have met a ten-year-old child who weighed 40 pounds, was a sickly shade of blue and was waiting in intensive care for a heart transplant when Sharry got to him. Four months later, he was back at home, a healthy shade of pinky beige and weighing 80 pounds, still healing, but with his old heart ticking just fine. I have met a person who was dying of emphysema. Today he is back at work running his business, golfing on weekends, and, yes, regrowing lung tissue—with frequency.

Last week an emergency came to my door: a young man with rope burns around his neck, who was crying hysterically and suicidal because his wife had left him. I tested his voice and found that her birth sound (yes, we each have a set of birth frequencies!) was missing from his spectrum. You need a balanced spectrum to be mentally, physically and emotionally 'harmonised'. We are attracted to people who have sounds we need and repelled from people who have sounds of which we have too much. I 'fed' this young man the frequency he was missing and within thirty minutes his whole demeanor and attitude changed. He was no longer 'desperate' for his wife's company and he could discuss the situation rationally and logically.

With Sharry's work, I can measure the way a person is using a substance (Is that prescription working for you?), find nutritional deficiencies and toxins, feed them the energy they need to mend their own body parts, discover the root cause of a problem, and on and on. The potential benefits of this work seem endless (anyone want to heat a room with sound?). I am still learning the principles that Sharry has been developing and working successfully with for years...

Keep up the wonderful work. We do look forward to each issue. For Harmony, Kathy Green Fucetola, Life Spirit Center, Newton, NJ, USA.

(Dear Kathy: As you can see, there's an article on Sharry in this issue. Thank you anyway. Ed.)
